

Rimbold Bordeau, Executive Chef

“Food is art and I am the artist. In other words, food is me and I am food. I know that everything about business comes down to people. Where in business can one escape the impact of human care? Human creativity, commitment, frustration and despair are a part of the human existence. There is no reason for anything in business to exist if it does not serve the needs of the people. This is the reason I make service my number one priority here at Georgia Institute of Technology.”

I know that life is too short to be stressed. I carry no ego. I learned at a young age to avoid having an ego so close to your position because when you fail, your ego goes with it. Every one of us on earth is here to serve one another. My service here on earth is to help my fellow being and treat people with respect and human dignity and to use my talent as a culinarian to bring people together and make them happy.”
